Trump's trumpeting...

Message...

It is sad and ironic that the tragic results of America's aging president in disrupting the world trade balance is hitting hardest at those in his own age group.

Donald Trump's fickle meddling with tariffs on American imports are hitting hard at investment values around the world. There is no doubt that those most upset and hurt are older investors who see their life savings disappearing before their eyes - paying for his megalomaniacal follies.

Stock prices rise and fall with alarming frequency as United States administrators flip-flop from one tariff announcement to the next, starting a trade war that has the rest of the world reeling.

We are all having to dance to the fickle notions of Trump's erratic mind, not only in his attitude to trade, but with his wild ideas for ending international wars, expanding US boundaries and 101 other mind-boggling suggestions.

One has to ask how, in the world's proclaimed leading democratic nation, one man has so much power and such an influence on what happens to everyone else's future. Is there no elected body in the United States that can exert a calming on this influence on this totally erratic behaviour?

During the US elections Trump promised, if he won the presidency, to end the conflicts in Palestine and Ukraine within a week. So far both conflicts seem to be deepening with more civilian lives being lost in both battles.

Trump's apparently poorly researched tariff changes are alienating America from the rest of the world as well as sending stock markets into turmoil. There are almost hourly changes as new difficulties arise and pressure from American industry and commerce panic over the results on their profitability.

Canada and Greenland have left no doubt that they want not a bar of Trump's suggestion that they be included into the United States family and no one is quite sure where he's going with the Panama Canal.

So is anyone benefiting from all of this catastrophic manipulation? It appears only the rich who can afford to buy price-reduced shares at the bottom of their value and then ride the improvements up to greater riches. Certainly retired people on fixed income are having to watch in horror as their life savings disappear almost in front of their eyes.

Trump says that he is trying to make America mightier still, by encouraging manufacturers to bring home their activities from the cheaper production centres. It might create extra jobs in the US, but at what extra cost. America with its unions and high cost of living can never match the production costs in Asia and China.

With massive amounts of technology like iPhones being made in China and imported into America higher tariffs are obviously going to put prices up around the world. Surely this has to be to China's

When Cell phone become an addiction—just like so many other addictions...

We all know some people who seem to never have their cellphone out of reach, almost like an extension of their arm. Not many, Not like the many young people who feel lost without their phone - their lifeline to their social world and to defining who they are, or wish to be.

For most of us older adults, the cell phone is of some use, often as a last resource.

Overuse of cell phones, sometimes called phone addiction or nomophobia, can lead to various physical and mental health problems, as well as negatively impact social interactions and academic performance.

Symptoms can include anxiety, agitation, and difficulty concentrating when without a phone. Excessive screen time can also affect sleep, vision, and even lead to "text neck" from prolonged forward head posture.

But what constitutes a phone addiction from 'normal' use of a cell phone?

Lying about smartphone use?

Loved ones expressing concern?

Neglect or trouble completing duties at work, school, or home?

More and more time using a phone?

Checking peoples' profiles repeatedly due to anxiety?

Accidents or injury due to phone use?

Working later to complete tasks?

Weak or non-existent social life?

Fear of missing out?

Isolation from loved ones?

A feeling of lack of connection?

Angry or irritated if phone use is interrupted?

Getting up at night to check a phone?

Reaching for the phone the moment they are alone or bored?

Phantom vibrations (thinking the phone buzzes when it doesn't)?

Limiting phone use is difficult?

Craving access to a smartphone or another device?

Anxious to get the latest model?

Older adults have a more normalized usage of cell phones than do people under the age of 30 years. I imagine this is because we find the whole process difficult to become overly committed to. Sure, a cell phone has possible use, if you can remember where it is, if it is charged, or if it can contact the ever increasing number of people who no longer see the benefits of a land line.

But it seems so many younger folk do seem addicted and spend countless hours trying to determine and refine their online profile. This can work well for the so called 'beautiful people' who use that profile to become 'influencers' but for the majority, there is no such glamour.

Many young are fearful about being targeted by others, often anonymously and vindictively.

Cell phone usage seems very personal to the user. No one can see or hear what is being received and written. This can lead to difficulties in communicating within whanau.

Cell phone use is inevitably going to increase before, in time, I believe it will decrease in favour of much more face to face contact. Just like in the old days.

Patched up and ready to go...? Grey Power Forever...

We're the largest gang in the land.

Grey; that shady hinterland on the colour spectrum between white and black, is the first part of our title. And we won't be the first gang to use the noun "power" in our name.

Grey Power NZ has about 90,000 members at last count but unlike other gangs with the power proclamation in their name, none of us regularly wear a gang patch in public.

Perhaps that's where we are failing. If we had, say, 80,000 members out on the street, wearing Grey Power gang patches it would be like a sartorial hikoī, a peoples' protest against an inane and ill-considered piece of coalition government legislation.

I'm sure the gentlemen from Black Power would catch on to our protest pretty smartly and might even be encouraged to funnel some of their allegedly ill gotten gains and expertise into designing and funding our patches.

Within our own ranks, we have several dab design hands. Perhaps a mobility scooter rampant with flames licking from its wheels or a Lazy Boy chair with Satan sitting in it.

After all, the nation's already beleaguered police force will be hard pressed to arrest all of the Grey Power membership and in some cases the constabulary would be handcuffing their own grandparents and carting them off to court.

According to the legislation, gang insignia is banned in all public places, including cars. So nipping down to the dairy for a litre of milk could be fraught with possibilities of arrest and imprisonment.

Paddy wagons full of Grey Power patch wearers will be queueing at courthouses throughout the country. After a certain age, the imposition of a criminal record is of no consequence – most of us don't need to worry about having a record stymieing job applications and we can't afford to travel overseas anyway.

Banned insignia includes any symbol or representation that indicates gang membership but tattoos and coloured clothing are not included in the ban. So at least that means I'll be able to keep my Grey Power forever tattoo.

Breaches of the ban carry a sentence of up to six months in prison or $5000 fine (about six pension payments). Money in the bank – no living expenses for six months and I suspect the boys in the cell block would show us elders more respect than the Ministry of Social Development does.

Who knows? Maybe we could give them a bit of advice on how to turn their lives around....it could be the start of a whole new movement – Grey Power behind bars. But really, there will be practical concerns. How many cells have access for wheel-chairs and walking frames?

UNESCO will send teams of rapporteurs to ascertain why so many of our aged are incarcerated and look at the legality of the gang patch legislation. Aotearoa/New Zealand will be re-ranked among the likes of North Korea, Uganda and Russia in human rights rankings.

Maybe it's time for the people to patch up in support of members of other gangs. Some support could go further towards a solution for gang problems than imprisonment and social alienation does.

Thank you Lyndsay Wright.

Love your hips...

Are you at risk?

Unless you've injured yourself in a fall, avoiding a fall is probably the last thing on your mind.

Falling over shouldn't be considered part of the normal ageing process, but we need to be realistic. As we grow older, underlying conditions or problems, with balance, strength or mobility do increase our risk of falling.

Each year, one in three people aged 65 and over will fall. For people aged 80 and over, the risk increases to one in two. That said, many falls are preventable.

One of the ways everyday New Zealanders are reducing their falls risks is by attending exercise classes especially designed for them.

Community group strength and balance classes will support participants to improve their strength and balance and help them live stronger for longer.

Strength and Balance classes...

Chair's message...

As another ANZAC day is acknowledged and commemorated, I give pause to reflect on the sacrifices those men and women made all those years ago.

I also wonder what many of those people would make of New Zealand today, in comparison to the way NZ was back eighty years ago at the end of WW2, and even more so, one hundred and seven years ago at the end of WW1.

I think that many of them were hoping that they were helping to make NZ a better place in the long run for their children and grandchildren by their contribution to the war efforts in their particular eras.

Many came back with significant injuries, my father for one. He like most others, never complained about what life had dished up, and also like most, never talked about the "war" ever, not once while I was growing up.

I guess for those of us, and there are now a couple of generations, whom have never had to face the personal consequences of warfare: "We don't know he lucky we are".

We can see war movies until the cows come home, but the one great thing that can't be conveyed by watching, is the smell of the battlefield.

I can't even imagine the stench that there must have been in many a battlefield, especially the protracted fighting during WW1.

So when I look around NZ today, and look at the multitude of issues that face many people in their daily lives, by and large, they are not facing death or injury as a constant concern, therefore we can certainly count our blessings.
